

Future 5: Prioritize the United States efforts

The United States has many military and economic assets, but currently they are “spread thin” throughout the world. The US continues to get involved in a multitude of conflicts while struggling with the demand for resources; resources needed to solve these conflicts. We must prioritize the problems facing America. We need to put an ample amount of effort into resolving problems based on importance. If we put enough effort and resources into one problem at a time, then problems will be solved much more effectively. The United States will not ignore world problems, but prioritize conflicts in an efficient manner.

Mount Olive High School