Freedom in Our Lifetime: South Africa's Struggle

Student Text
Copyright and Permissions

This document is licensed for single-teacher use. The purchase of this curriculum unit includes permission to make copies of the Student Text and appropriate student handouts from the Teacher Resource Book for use in your own classroom. Duplication of this document for the purpose of resale or other distribution is prohibited.

Permission is not granted to post this document for use online. Our Digital Editions are designed for this purpose. See www.choices.edu/digital for information and pricing.

The Choices Program curriculum units are protected by copyright. If you would like to use material from a Choices unit in your own work, please contact us for permission.
Acknowledgments

Colonization and Independence in Africa was developed by the Choices Program with the assistance of scholars at Brown University and other experts in the field. We wish to thank the following for their invaluable input to the written portion of this curriculum:

Barbara Brown
Director of Outreach
Center for African Studies, Boston University

James Campbell
Edgar E. Robinson Professor in United States History
Stanford University

Neta Crawford
Professor, Departments of Political Science and African-American Studies
Boston University

Nancy Jacobs
Professor of History
Brown University

Newell Stultz
Professor of Political Science, Emeritus
Brown University

Thank you to Sarah Kreckel and Sarah Massey for their work developing and writing this curriculum unit.

We also thank Dave Farrar and the teachers in Pietermaritzburg, South Africa, who tested a draft of the unit.

Freedom in Our Lifetime: South Africa’s Struggle was made possible with a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Cover image and all maps by Alexander Sayer Gard-Murray.
Contents

Introduction: A Negotiated Revolution .......................................................... 1

Part I: Precolonial and Colonial South Africa .................................................. 2
   - The Arrival of Outsiders ........................................................................... 2
   - The Mineral Revolution ........................................................................... 5

Part II: Apartheid and Its Opposition ............................................................ 9
   - The Rise of Apartheid ............................................................................ 10
   - Resistance .............................................................................................. 12
   - Radicalism Grows .................................................................................. 16

June 1961: The Moment of Decision .............................................................. 19
   - Option 1: Continue Nonviolent Struggle With Multiracial Support .......... 21
   - Option 2: Use Limited, Structured Violence with Communist Party Support 24
   - Option 3: Advocate Guerrilla War Tactics for Africans Alone .................. 27

Part III: Becoming South Africa .................................................................... 30
   - Entrenchment ......................................................................................... 31
   - Liberation .............................................................................................. 33
   - Post-Apartheid South Africa ................................................................... 35

Chronology of South African History ............................................................ 37

Supplementary Documents ........................................................................... 39

Supplementary Resources ............................................................................ 50

Videos ............................................................................................................ online
Introduction: A Negotiated Revolution

In 1994, Nelson Mandela became the first black president of South Africa, following the first truly democratic elections in that country. It was the first time Mandela had been allowed to vote in his seventy-six years. One of the most famous political prisoners of the twentieth century, Mandela spent twenty-seven years in South African prisons for violating the laws of apartheid. His original sentence was life.

What was apartheid?

Apartheid, an Afrikaans word that means “separate” or “apartness” in English, was the law of the land in South Africa from 1948 to 1990. This system of racial discrimination was designed to keep whites, blacks, coloureds, and Asians separate from each other in every way. The government segregated all schools, housing, jobs, and transportation. People were often forbidden to speak against the government, blacks were not allowed to vote, and the government could detain people for months and even years without charging them. Some have described apartheid as the most complex system of racial discrimination ever devised.

The United Nations, members of the international community, and many South African residents condemned the apartheid government. But it took nearly fifty years of internal and international pressure to remove the apartheid laws from the books.

During his decades in prison Mandela had plenty of time to think about how he and others could change the racist system.

“We [the prisoners] established a very strong relationship [with the warders] because we adopted a policy of talking to the warders and persuading them to treat us as human beings…. Sit down with a man, [and] if you have prepared your case very well, that man, after he has sat down to talk to you, will never be the same again. [Talking] has been a very powerful weapon.”

—Nelson Mandela

This spirit of dialogue ultimately made it possible for South Africa in the 1990s to make the remarkable transition from the repressive rule of a white minority government to an inclusive democracy. Many had predicted that a violent civil war would precede the change in government. That did not happen. A member of the new South African Constitutional Court, Albie Sachs, whose right arm was blown off by a car bomb the government planted in 1988, called the transition a “negotiated revolution.”

“It wasn’t a miracle. It didn’t just come to pass. Our transition had been the most willed, thought-about, planned-for event of the late twentieth century…. For the doubters, it had been a miracle, while for those with intense belief, it had been entirely rational.”

—Justice Albie Sachs

These readings will take you back to a point in time when whites, blacks, coloureds, and Asians in South Africa were debating how to solve the “South Africa Problem.” The first reading traces the early history of South Africa, providing background on the peoples of the region and on the development of a segregated society. Part II explores the responses to apartheid by whites, blacks, coloureds, and Asians in South Africa as well as the international community.

In 1961 leaders of the anti-apartheid movement met to discuss their options. Their comrades were being jailed and killed, the apartheid laws were becoming ever more stringent, and whites were becoming more conservative. What was the solution to the apartheid problem? Using primary sources, you will delve into questions that changed the course of South African history. An epilogue will explain the outcome of the 1961 debate.
Freedom in Our Lifetime: South Africa’s Struggle
Teacher Resource Book

THE CHOICES PROGRAM
BROWN UNIVERSITY
Contents

Note to Teachers .................................................................................................................. 2

Part I: Precolonial and Colonial South Africa
  Study Guides and Graphic Organizer ................................................................................. 3
  Colonial South Africa: Moshoeshoe, the Boers, and the British .................................... 7

Part II: Apartheid and Its Opposition
  Study Guides and Graphic Organizer ................................................................................. 11
  Poetry and Politics .............................................................................................................. 15

The Options Role Play
  Organization and Preparation ............................................................................................ 20
  Graphic Organizer ............................................................................................................ 22
  Debate and Discussion ...................................................................................................... 26

Part III: Becoming South Africa
  Study Guides and Graphic Organizer ................................................................................. 28
  The Soweto Uprising: Primary Source Analysis ............................................................... 32

Synthesis
  Violence as Protest ............................................................................................................ 41
  Steve Biko and Black Consciousness ................................................................................. 43

Key Terms ............................................................................................................................ 48

Supplemental Materials and Videos ..................................................................................... online
Poetry and Politics

Objectives:
Students will: Explore the relationship between political events and literature.

• Compare and contrast 1950s poetry from black South Africa.

• Evaluate the impact of the Sharpeville massacre on blacks in South Africa.

Required Reading:
Students should have read Part II in the student text and completed “Study Guide—Part II” (TRB 11-12) or the “Advanced Study Guide—Part II” (TRB-13).

Videos:
Short videos for use with this lesson can be found at <www.choices.edu/southafricamaterials>.

Handouts:
“1950s Protest Poetry” (TRB 17-20)

In the Classroom:
1. Essential Question—Write the following statement from the handout on the board: “Literature in Africa cannot but be political.” Ask students to consider the role of literature in political protest, and, vice-versa, how politics can influence writers. Can students think of examples of U.S. literature that addresses political themes? Remind students that anti-apartheid works were often banned in South Africa, and that writers frequently lived in exile.

2. Group Responses—Form eight groups of students (or fewer, if you have a smaller class) and assign each group one of the poems from the handout. Ask students to consider the questions in relation to their assigned poem.

3. Drawing Connections—Literary critics often consider the events at Sharpeville to mark a turning point in South African literature. Ask students to recall the events at Sharpeville as described in the student text. What happened? How might that massacre have changed the way people wrote about their situation? If time permits, ask students to compare the post-Sharpeville poem with the others in the collection. How do they differ?

Have students consider how violence is expressed in the poems. Which poems discuss violence? Do they talk about past violence? Future violence? What are their attitudes about the use of violence?

Extra Challenge:
Have students research the works of one of South Africa’s banned or exiled writers.

Homework:
Students should read “June 1961: The Moment of Decision” and “Options in Brief” in the student text.

Play the video of Fatima Meer answering the question:
• How did Soweto contribute to the end of apartheid?

Play the video of Professor Newell Stultz answering the following question:
• How did Sharpeville affect the anti-apartheid movement?
1950s Protest Poetry

“Literature in Africa cannot but be political.”
Femi Ojo-Ade, literary critic

Introduction: In the 1950s black and coloured literature in South Africa grew enormously as the anti-apartheid movement developed breadth and strength. The following poems, written between 1949-1960, reflect a range of responses to the apartheid government and to the effects of apartheid on everyday life. As you examine your assigned selection, consider the questions below. Be prepared to share the conclusions of your group with your classmates.

1. What was happening politically and economically in South Africa at the time the poem was written?

2. What does the poem describe? What events or scenes does it portray?

3. Does the poem discuss violence at all? If so, how?

4. What is the mood of the poem? Is it resigned, angry, hopeful, etc? Remember that poems are meant to be read aloud. You may wish to read your poem aloud with your group.

5. How does the poem envision the future? What does your poem suggest will happen to race relations in South Africa?
Selection 1

Remember Sharpeville
Dennis Brutus (c. 1960)

What is important about Sharpeville
is not that seventy died:
nor even that they were shot in the back retreating, unarmed, defenseless and certainly not the heavy caliber slug that tore through a mother’s back and ripped into the child in her arms killing it

Remember Sharpeville
bullet-in-the-back day

Because it epitomized oppression and the nature of society more clearly than anything else;
it was the classic event

Nowhere is racial dominance more clearly defined ownhere the will to oppress more clearly demonstrated

what the world whispers apartheid declares with snarling guns the blood the rich lust after
South Africa spills in the dust

Remember Sharpeville
Remember bullet-in-the-back day

And remember the unquenchable will for freedom
Remember the dead and be glad

Selection 2

Where the Rainbow Ends
Richard Rive (1955)

Where the rainbow ends,
There’s going to be a place brother,
Where the world can sing all sorts of songs,
And we’re going to sing together, brother,
You and I,
Though you’re White and I’m not.

It’s going to be a sad song, brother,
‘Cause we don’t know the tune,
And it’s a difficult tune to learn,
But we can learn it, brother,
You and I,
There’s no such tune as a Black tune,
There’s no such tune as a White tune,
There’s only music, brother,
And it’s music we’re going to sing.
Where the rainbow ends.

Selection 3

A Game of Guessing
G. M. Kolisang (1958)

I adjusted my tie and put on my hat,
And walked out of my rusty shanty home.

I caught the 8.30 a.m. Booth Camp bus.

I heard the street clock strike nine,
Entered an elegant, stately shop.

‘Yes, John. What do you want?’
Amiably said the lady behind the counter.

‘How,’ I asked, ‘did you know my name, Madam?’

I in return, did courteously ask,
Thoroughly satisfied by her amazing ingenuity.

‘Oh! Of course I guessed it,’ was her positive reply.

‘Then, Madam, you are, I am convinced, surely capable
Of guessing what it is I want.’
Selection 4

Because I'm Black
Herbert Dhlomo (1949)

Because I’m black
You think I lack
The talents, feelings and ambitions
That others have;
You do not think I crave positions
That others crave.

Psychology
And Zoology
Have proved that Race and blood are a fiction…
All men are Man;
Diversity means not disunion—
It is God’s plan;
White blood and black in test transfusions
Answer the same.
They harbour childish vain delusions
Who better claim.
Because the people eat and sing
And mate,
You do not see their suffering.
You rate
Them fools
And tools
Of those with power and boastful show;
Not fate, but fault, has made things so—
Beware! The people, struggling, hold
The winning cards:
And when they strike they will be bold—
And will strike hard!

Selection 5

The God of Formal Ways
Ezekiel Mphahlele (1950)

I made a god,
And now he rules with iron rod;
I worship in his formal ways,
His name I praise.

I swear and lie
To them and my own self—to buy
A nod of favour and approval—
Still so formal!

He must implore,
While knocking at compassion’s door;
I show him, yet within’s despise—
Such form is vice!

My beaming smile
Is just to aid my flattering style
The mirthless laugh a social stunt
Not to be blunt,
O God of Form,
You baffle reason, lull the storm
Of passion, and the pain of truth
You lie to soothe!

Made by me,
You split me into two, and see!
I sweat and chafe against your chains;
I’ve lost my brains!

You know it well—
I’d crush your power and break your spell,
You know I may not just decide—
There lies my pride!
Selection 6

Rise Up
Desmond Dhlomo (1955)

Oh land of warrior bold and brave!
Where once you did your spearheads wield
Your own dear land you strove to save
Now crumpled down, and do you yield?

O Chaka¹ great thy name I fear;
How like a god you strode this strand;
I praise you and this land once dear
Where once you strode with Black war band.

And I poor son, from your dust rise
And seek once more a once-dear land
—No assegais² nor war-like cries—
But crave on earth a worthy stand.

Rise up! swarthy Chaka’s train,
’Tis time that you should show in deed
That you be brave, have evils slain
And love and peace you seek to breed.

Rise up! ’tis not by magic hand
You’ll win a name in lands abroad
But through great toil and trusty stand
You’ll live as if all time afford.

¹ Chaka = Shaka, a Zulu king famous for his military skill
² assegai = throwing spears used by Zulu warriors

Selection 7

The Contraction and Enclosure of Land
St. J. Page Yako (1958) translated from Xhosa

Thus spake the heirs of the land
Although it is no longer ours.
This land will be folded like a blanket
Till it is like the palm of a hand.
The racing ox will become entangled in the wire,
Too weak to dance free, it will be worn out by the dance of the yoke and the plough.
They will crowd us together like tadpoles
In a calabash ladle. Our girls
Will have their lobola¹ paid with paper,
Coins that come and go, come and go.
Blood should not be spilled, so they say
Nowadays, to unite the different peoples,
Until we no longer care for each other,
As a cow licks her calf, when love
And nature urge her to do so.
Can money bring people together?
Yes, a man may have words with his son’s wife,
His son need no longer respect her mother.

Yes, we fold up our knees,
It’s impossible to stretch out,
Because the land has been hedged in.

¹ lobola = “bride price” paid by man’s family to woman’s

Selection 8

How Long, O God?
Walter N.B. Nlapo (1950)

Burst forth my heart complaining
Yours can’t be joyful song.
Sorrows you have been restraining
Within yourself for long!

Like flame let your feeling’s flower
Cry aloud, let earth hear
Your mighty voice with all its power,
Tell the pains of many a year.

I’m black but I’m kingly, and even
God knows; a slave I cry,

And for fatherland grieving;
And stars shed tears in the sky.

God! must my tears flow forever?
Hear me in my tears
before I cross Lethe river¹
To land of no fears.

¹ The legendary Lethe River erases the memory of those who cross it.